"And this, I suppose, is the village school-house," said Mark Moreau, as, emerging from the deep gloom of the Adirondack woods, he stood in the little cleared space, where the grass was as close and fine as velvet, the scent of white clover filled the air, and a small, one-storied house, painted the dull color which would now be called "Venetian red." neatled beneath the boughs of a red," nestled beneath the boughs of a monster black walnut tree. there's no village worth mentioning, unless you choose to call the stage station one. A SERIOUS MISTAKE.

Mr. Moreau had been fishing all day.
His creel was well-lilled, his lunchbasket empty; his India-rubber boots besplashed with mud; his countenance bronzed with a fine, healthy sunburn. He was tired out, with joints aching, nose blistered, face swollen with the unintermitting attacks of the black flies and mosquitos. And yet he called this and mosquitos. And yet he called this

"capital sport!"

"Hello, you, sir!" said Moreau, to a sly, white-headed little urchin, who was coming down the hill with a pail.

"What's in that pail!"

"Nothin', sir,' was the answer.

"What are you doing with it?"

"Goin' after water."

"Is there a spring hereabouts?"

"Is there a spring hereabouts?"
"Yes, sir."
Morean nodded his head.

Morean nonded his head.
"Good!" said he. "Show me where it is, and I'll give you a penny."
The little lad, nothing loth, ran lightly on in advance, until he reached the spot, beneath a huge, gray rock, where a tiny stream of water bubbled into a ude stone basin, worn by its continued drip.

"Here it is, mister," said he; "and here's a gourd-shell to drink outen."

And Mr. Moreau drunk a deep, long

And Mr. Moreau drank a deep, long and cooler than ice!

And he flung the penny to the expectant lad, who, having secured his largess, speedily filled his pail and trudged up the hill once more.
"Johnny! Johnny! what keeps you so long?"

It was a sweet, bell-like voice, and Moreau listened to it with a sort of dreamy satisfaction, as he lay there among the ferns, staring up at the sky.

"The school-ma'am, in all probabilmy," he said to himself, and turned half-way around, among the green "hart'stongues," to see what manner of female she was.

Round, and dimpled, and rosy, with hair like braided sunshine, big blue eyes, and checks pinker than the wild-roses even now scattering their petals over her face. Mark raised himself on his grass and wild-flowers, by the clear lit-tle spring, and wilked slowly up the steep path. The hearty in the pink-calico dress did not turn and flee, as he had half sus-preted she would, but stood awaiting obotel?"

"No," said the blonde, calmly—"I go up toward Deems' Lake."
Bailled again. But Mr. Mark Moreau allowed no cloud to dim the bland brightness of his visage.

"Ah! said he. "Then I will bid you good-bye, hoping that I may have the pleasure of meeting you again."

The pretty schoolma'am smiled, colored and courtesied once again, and then shut the school-house door. Mr. Moreau walked composedly down

"She is a little jewel," said he to himself; 'and she knows her value. I'll find out who she is, and what she is. Upon my word, I haven't seen such a face in a year. I should like to paint her as Hebo, peeping out from a bower of roses; or Persephone, with both arms full of flowers. I've always fancied the idea of a wife who should differ from the rank and file of smiling, simpering, fashionable women. She's a little disposed to keep me at arm's-length, but I don't like her the less for that!"

Once under the shelter of the little inn—a long, straggling, stout building, which might have been a fortress, or which might have been a lottless, or might have been a grist-mill—he casu-ally alluded to his day's adventure, as he sat over his broiled ham and eggs, weak coffee, and freshly-fried crullers. Oh, by-the-way, Squire," said he to his landlord (up in the Adirondacks to his landlord (up in the Adirondacks all landlords are "Squires," and so is everybody else, "I came across your district school-house to-day."

"Did ye, though?" said the tavern-keeper. "Wal, now, ain't that kind o' cur'us? Why, it's kep'—the deestrick school—by my niece, Ketury Spikes!"

"Keturah Spikes!" repeated Mr. Moreau, rather taken aback.
Somehow, he had associated some very different nomenclature with the fair one with the golden locks. "Keturah" did not seem to suit her at all, "Yes, Ketury Spikes," said mine host. "Named after an aunt as was expected the said of to leave her money, but didn't. Pretty smart gal, though, Ketary. Don't need no legacy to boost her along."

"Indeed!" said Mr. Stiles.

Florida volunteer."
All that evening Mr. Lemuel Stiles, who, according to his own frank admission, was "not scholard," wrestled with a sheet of paper, a musty inkbottle, and a stump of a pen, and at ten o'clock produced the following doonment, not without a certain grave triumph:

Neece Kitoorah, this is to interduce mr. mark mare, who Wants a Wife, and you want a Hasband, and there's a pure of you. From your afectionate Uncle, to comand.

L. STILES.

"I guess that there'll do the busi-s," said Mr. Stiles, with pardonable oride, as he superred out a blot from the oop of the L with his coat-cuff.

Mark Moreau glanced over it rather dubiously.

"If she wasn't such a little beauty," the thought, "this would seem rather a Quixetic enterprise. But those supphire-blue eyes would light a man over the very Tarpeian cliff!"

And the next morning he proceeded straight to the school-house.

"Bub!" he said, to a red-haired boy who was shuffling his feet outside the door, "is Miss Spikes within?"

"Just come," said the boy. "School in the said.

Italf a minute later there was a rush like that of a buffalo, and a tall, lean female, with a scanty knot of fox-colored hair screwed on the top of her head, watery blue eyes, high cheek-bones, and badly-fitting false teeth, flung herself on his shoulder, a la provincial thea-

"When I seen you go by the tavern yesterday, I felt you was my counter-part!" sighed this gentle gazelle, with a strong scent of fried onions in her breath; "but little did I dream as you were so near me in soul. I was a setting on the back-door step when you went a past. I had the face-ache, and Fanny Dorel she took charge of the school for me yesterday." terday.

"Fanny Dorel!" This, then, was the name of the gold-tressed divinity who had taken his heart by storm. There was a misapprehension all around, and Mark Moreau made haste to disengage himself from Miss Keturah Spikes' chinging arms.
"There is some mistake," he said

"No, there ain't," said Miss Spikes.
"Io, there ain't," said Miss Spikes.
"I supposed this letter was addressed to Fanny Dorel," he pleaded.

"It says Ketnrah Spikes plain enough, don't it?" said the lady, with gathering clouds upon her brow.

"My dear Miss Spikes—" he began.

"Call me Keturah," she smiled.

"I see that I am intruding on the busiest part of your day," he urged.

"School teachin' ain' nothin', when the tenderest feelin's of the heart is ncerned," murmured the tali woman "But business is business," reasoned our hero, artfully; "and I shall see you this evening at your uncle's house. Until then, au revair!"

The school-bell changed—Mr. Moreau hurried away. Miss Spikes returned with a softly-palpitating heart to her books and slates—Minerva succeeded.

Cupid—and our hero plunged into the woods, wiping his resking brow.

"Good Jupiter!" he muttered to himself; "does that Gorgon believe that there is a man in the United States mad enough to marry her?"

Miss Spikes "let out school" early that day, and hurried to the tavern without loss of time.
"Where's Mr. Moreau?" she breathlessly demanded of her uncle.

"Gone," said Mr. Lemuel Stiles— "bag and baggage, horse and foot. Sent for his traps at eleven o'clock, and took the southward-bound train."

miss Keturah wrung her hands.

'Oh, dear! oh, dear!' she gasped;

'Why did I ever lose sight of him?'

'Keturah,' said her uncle severely,

'that's the third husband you've let slip! I begin to think it's all your bad management. And this was a dreadful likely man, too."

As for Mr. Mark Moreau, he scarcely dared to breathe freely until he was in the Lake Champlain steamer.

He had merely intended to amuse bimself by a little flirtation with a woodland beauty, but the matter had become decidedly serious. And perhaps he needed the lesson. Flirting young men sometimes do need lessons.—Salurday Night.

And Call it Heathen County. The Latest Horror from "Christian." PANA. Ill., Nov. 17.-This morning fiendish case of outrage on an innocent young girl was brought to light, known crime committed against Miss road, to visit some friends in Beardstown. The train being about an hour late, she found on arriving at number of the North American Recrats, so that, without taking into this place that she had missed connection here and could not get out of here until this evening. Being movement and strongly approves the be composed of 36 Republicans, 36 short of funds, only having money enough to carry her through to her journey's end, she did not know what The ticket agent, taking pity vidual's right to use, but its sole aim do will elect a Republican. At this another young rough named Wm. Coulter, put in Republicans which is one less than a appearance, and representing himself as a runner for a hotel, told her to come with him and he would size of their victory they may feel as expected that the number will be 37, give her lodgings at the hotel free of charge. Excitement has run high in this city all day, and threats of lynching could be heard on all sides. The people of this county are disgusted with the law, and feel that the only way that they can have justice done is to take the law in their own hands and mete out the just punishment that they deserve. This outrage, oncurring so soon after the horrible outrage on Miss Bond, has caused a revival in the excitement in that case. and a great many people look forward to the coming term of court with a great deal of concern, and a first class neck-tie party. The prisoners will be taken to Taylorville in the morning, and confined with two and sometimes with three in the county jail until after the trial comes off.

Bisbee, was its fairness, coupled with an honest count and return of the votes cast. He says that the chief could make it one, was the tariff, he taking strong ground in favor of protection, while his opponent advocated "a tariff for revenue only.' The chief industrial interests of the district are the growing of oranges, lemons and other tropical fruits, the manufacture of lumber and to a considerable extent the growing of rice and sugar, and it appears these interests responded to Colonel Bisbee's

American industry. MONMOUTH, Ill., Nov. 16 .- A few weeks ago the large grain barn of William Flack, north of this city, was destroyed by an incendiary, entailing a loss of $1500. To-day Moses Robinson, a neighbor of Flack, tioned by the judge, he stated that was arrested, charged with the crime Sackett's Harbor and Detroit; Hayes he was looking for the little book of arson. Robinson is about 70 which is given to the witnesses to years old, and is worth, about $20,-000. He and Flack have had some legal disputes, and it is alleged that Robinson adopted this mode of wreaking vengeance. A detective was taken into the employ of Flack, and worked upon the case. Robin son gave bond of $1,000 for his ap pearance to day. The case against Robinson was worked up by the Mooney & Boland detective agency, of Chicago, and there seems to be little doubt of Robinson's guilt. Robinson, it appears, had on several oc casions let his cattle run at large and do damage to Flack's farm, and especially to a fine hedge. Flack had Robinson arrested and fined. This was repeated several times for like offenses. He, Robinson, threatened to get even with Flack, if he had to

CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 17 .- A. magnetic storm of remarkable force and unparalleled duration has prevailed here since about 4 o'clock this morning, prostrating telegraphic communication until noon, when it began to abate. At intervals the wires were worked without a battery and with ground connection. The line was worked with a metallic current by making a loop with two wires. The district call wires and short lines were not much affected, and telephonic communication seemed to be improved. The extraordinary feature is that the weather is rainy and muggy, whereas electric storms generally occur when the atmosphere is clear and dry. Indianapolis, Nov. 17.—A peculiar electrical disturbance in connection with the working of the telegraph wires was noticed here this morning. It commenced about 8 o'clock and nomenon presented here was such as to charge the wires when the batteries were removed, and at times presenting a change of polarity in a brief period. The use of the quadruple system had to be abandoned for a time, and a metallic current was found to work without the disturbance of current reversals.

Norwithstanding the large majority which the Democrats will have in the next house of representatives, some of their-leaders, like Dan Voorhees, of Indiana, have hinted that there will be some very thorough work done in the matter of contested seats. About seventy of such cases are reported to be in process of preparation, and it is likely that the Democratic house committee on elections will commit its first blunder in this direction. A large number of Republican congressmen have been lected this year by a very small maority, and in all such cases the cry of fraud is to be raised, and the seat given to a Democrat upon the slightest shade of probability. The Democratic party is very hungry, and those candidates for congress who were defeated by small majorities can spend a winter very pleasantly in Washington as contestants for seats, and have all their expenses paid if they fail.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Nov. 11 .- This vas a bear day at the Oil Exchange. The market opened steady, with sales at $1.251. But shortly after 10 o'clock the report was received that the Anchor Oil Company had struck 500 barrels in Forrest county. Great excitement followed this report and would not be at all surprised to have the noon close, when final sales were made at 113; a drop of 12 cents from the highest point of the session. It is estimated that 3,000,-000 barrels of oil changed hands during this time.

were permanently to retain this velocity it would in the course of time travel right across our system and after leaving our system would retreat into the depths of infinite space. Is there any power adequate to recall this star voyage to infinity. We know of none, un-less it be the attraction of the stars or other bodies of our sidereal system It, therefore, becomes a matter of calculation to determine whether the attraction of all the material bodies of our sidereal system could be adequate, even with universal gravitation, to recall a body universal gravitation, to recall a body which seems bent on leaving that system with a velocity of 200 miles per second. This interesting problem has been discussed by Professor Newcomb, whose calculations we shall here follow. In the first place we require to make some estimate of the dimensions of the address a system, in order to see of the sidereal system, in order to see whether it seems likely that this star can ever be recalled. The number of stars may be taken at 100,000,000, which is probably double as many as the number we can see with our best telescopes The masses of the stars may be taken as on the average five times as great as the mass of the sun. The distribution of the stars is suggested by the constitution of the milky way. One hundred milhon stars are presumed to be disposed in a flat circular layer of such dimension that a ray of light would require 30,000 years to traverse one diameter. As suming the ordinary law of gravitation of such an arrangement in attempting to recall a moving star.

The whole question turns on a certain critical velocity of twenty-five miles a a second. If a star darts through the system we have just been considering with a velocity less than twenty-five miles a second, then, after that star had moved for a certain distance, the at tractive power of the system would gradually bend the path of the star round, and force the star to return to the system If, therefore, the velocities of the stars were under no circum-stances more than twenty five miles a necond, then, supposing the system to have the character we have described, that system might be always the same The stars might be in meessant methe years light of the must always remain in the vicinity of our present system, and our whole sideral system might be an solated object in space, just as our solat system is an isolated object in the extent of the sidereal system. We have, however, seen that for one star at all however, seen that for one star at an events the velocity is no less than two hundred miles a second. If this star dash through the system, then the at tractions of all the bodies in the system will unite in one grand effort to recall the wanderer. This attraction must to some extent be acknowledged, the speed of the wanderer must gradually demand as he recedes, into sing a but a but a few manderer. diminish as he recedes into space, but that speed will never be lessened suffic iently to bring the star back again. As the star retreats further and further the potency of the attraction will decrease. but, owing to the velocity of the star being over twenty-five miles a second, the attraction can never overcome the velocity, so that the star seems destined to escape. This calculation is, of course, founded on our assumption as to the total mass of the stars and other bodies which form our sidereal system. I hat estimate is founded on a liberal, indeed, a very liberal, interpretation of the evidence which our telescopes have afforded But it may still fall short of There may be more than a the truth hundred million stars in our system, their average weight may be more than our sun But unless the assump

ACTUAL RESULTS. DECATOR, ILL., Oct. 10, 1882.

WARREN & DURFEE, Agents Equitable Assurance Society, New York, Deca-Gentlemen I have to acknowledge the receipt through you of $272.51 from the Somety, in prompt compliance with its contract, that amount being the cash value of my Equitable Life Tontane Policy No. 75,179, at the close of the Tontine period 75,179, at the close of the Tontine period of ten years, October 1, 1882. The result is highly satisfactory to me. The coet of the policy, which in case of my demise during said term would have been worth just $1000 cash to my wife, has been only $64.69 for the term, an average of only $6 47 per year. I am aware that either of the other methods of settlement placed at my option by the Society would be as profitable to me as the one chosen, the only difference being that the settlement selected suits my circumstances better. In selected suits my circumstances better In any case, I can with the utmost candor say that I know of no maurance that affords so great a return for the money invested as a Tontine Policy in the Equit-able Life Assurance Society of New York.

Very respectfully yours, Oct 16-dtf Francis S Grimes. In explanation of the foregoing letter, we add the following Dr F & Grimes took out the said policy at the age of 😂
